

Queen Elizabeth Quotes

Grief is the price we pay for love.

I know of no single formula for success.

It is a mystery that it has always been easy to hate and destroy; yet to cherish and build is much more difficult.

Difficult times make us more resilient.

To succeed, competitors must respect their opponents.

Today, religion and culture are a source of difference and conflict, rather than tolerance and respect.

The birth of a baby brings great happiness – but then the business of growing up begins.

The older generation is able to give a sense of wisdom from experience, which can be invaluable.

People are touched by events which have their roots far across the world.

When life gets hard, the courageous do not lie down and accept defeat.

I have to be seen to be believed.

People who are the most happy, content and fulfilled are those who have lived the most unselfish lives.

Sport seems to have a wonderful way of bringing together people and nations.

Although as humans, we are capable of great acts of kindness, history teaches that we must save ourselves from recklessness and greed.

In times of doubt and anxiety, the attitude people show in their daily life is supremely important.

We must remember, that though we may hold different points of view, we have much more in common than there is dividing us.

Because of these challenging times, our responsibilities to others is greater than ever.

I know that I rely on my own faith to guide me through the good times, and the bad.

By being willing to put past differences behind us, and move forward together, we honor the freedom and democracy once won for us at so great a cost.

With age does come experience, and that can be a virtue, if it is sensibly used.

No age group has a monopoly on wisdom.

We know the reward is peace on earth, but we cannot win it without determination and concerted effort.

A blend of traditions serves to make us stronger because it provides the ingredients needed for social, political and economic resilience.

Giant leaps often start with small steps.