

Empowering Power

To achieve our power, we know that we cannot be committed - sometimes.

To acquire our power, we know there is a difference between listening and hearing.

To affirm our power, we know that is our given right.

To bask in our power, we know our intentions must always be pure.

To be true to our power, we know to quell hate and quicken love.

To construct our power, we know not to be destructive in any way, shape or form.

To develop our power, we know we must face what we are good at and what we are not.

To embrace our power, we know gratitude must be our main attitude.

To empower our power, we know never to blame another for our misgivings.

To ensure our power, we know it is better to be a light in the darkness, than waste time cursing it.

To find our power, we know takes patience and perseverance.

To formulate our power, we know that our thoughts can be our worst enemy or our best friend.

To fulfill our power, we know that courage will be necessary.

To fund our power, we know we need to feel good about ourselves, without needing approval of such..

To maintain our power, we know to stay in truth.

To manifest our power, we know to follow our hearts.

To not tire our power, we know to hush our negative thought forms.

To orchestrate our power, we know to beat to our own drummer.

To protect our power, we know that we must learn to guard ourselves.

To quest our power, we know to acquire more knowledge.

To respect our power, we know that no one can take it away without our consent.

To restore our power, we know to be accountable for our errors.

To secure our power, we know that if resentment is not relinquished entirely, it is not relinquished at all.

To sustain our power, we know to keep our humility and squash our arrogance.

To test our power, we know never to be afraid of our vulnerability.

To utilize our power, we know what counts is what really counts.