

Empowering Our Power

To achieve our power, we cannot be committed-sometimes.

To acquire our power, we are aware that there is a difference between listening and hearing.

To affirm our power, we are certain our power is our given right.

To bask in our power, our intentions must always be pure.

To be true to our power, we quell hate and quicken love.

To construct our power, we are not destructive in any way, shape or form.

To develop our power, we face what we are good at and what we are not.

To embrace our power, gratitude is our main attitude.

To empower our power, we never blame another for our misgivings.

To ensure our power, we become a light in the darkness, rather than wasting time cursing it.

To find our power, we develop patience and perseverance.

To formulate our power, we watch our thoughts, as they can be our worst enemy or our best friend.

To fulfill our power, we build our courage as it will be necessary.

To fund our power, we need to feel good about ourselves, without needing approval of such.

To maintain our power, we stay in truth.

To manifest our power, we follow our hearts.

To not tire our power, we hush our unwanted fears.

To orchestrate our power, we beat to our own drummer.

To protect our power, we must learn to guard ourselves.

To quest our power, we acquire more knowledge.

To respect our power, we are intent that no one can take it away from us without our consent.

To restore our power, we need to be accountable for our errors.

To secure our power, we realize if resentment is not relinquished entirely, it is not relinquished at all.

To sustain our power, we keep our humility and squash our arrogance.

To test our power, we are never to be afraid to show our vulnerability.

To utilize our power, we know what counts is what really counts.